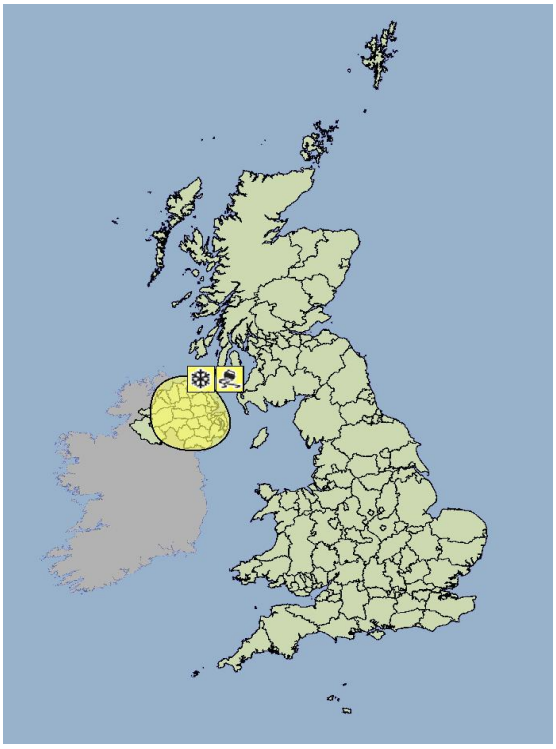
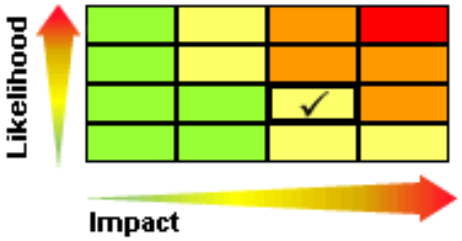
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A band of heavy rain will spread eastwards during Tuesday morning, quickly turning to snow on high level routes above 150 metres and to lower levels for a time before it clears, mainly in the east.

Whilst the most likely accumulations are of 5-10 cm of snow above 300 metres there is a low likelihood of seeing these amounts falling to 150 metres as well as 2-5 cm falling in places to low levels in the east. With much of this falling in a short period of time and during a busy travel period the potential for disruption is there but most places at lower levels will see a mixture of sleet and rain.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Snow and Ice

Valid from 02:00 on Tue, 13th Feb 2018 until 10:00 on Tue, 13th Feb 2018

A band of heavy rain will turn to snow, mainly on high ground, as it spreads eastwards early on Tuesday morning. Snow may fall to low levels in places before it clears during the morning. Temperatures will fall quickly as rain and snow clears, allowing ice to form on untreated surfaces.

Some roads and railways are likely to be affected with longer journey times by road, bus and train services and some cancellations are possible. Some injuries are possible from slips and falls on icy surfaces as well as the chance of some power cuts/interruptions to other services.

This is an update to move to a low likelihood of medium impacts though currently the majority of Northern Ireland will see lower levels of disruption.
